Revolutionary War Deaths No Match for Korean Figures

The nation's war dead since "the shot heard 'round the world" was fired by Yankee farmers in the Battle of Lexington on April 19, 1775, totaled about 996,500—some 3,550 short of the million mark—on the battle's 176th anniversary.

Should the Korean War continue with American combat casualties running at the recent rate of 1,000 deaths a month, "GI-X," the unknown millionth soldier to be killed in all U.S. wars since 1775 will fall about August 1.

American military deaths in Korea during the first six months of hostilities exceeded by more than 1,100 the total number of colonial soldiers killed during eight years of the Revolutionary War. In Korea during the first six months of the war about 7,500 Americans were killed, against 6,163 Continental soldiers lost between 1775 and 1783.

The first nine months of war in Korea claimed 9,600 American lives, according to Defense Department reports. During the same period from June 25, 1950, to March 25, 1951, automobiles on the home front killed 28,400 men, women and children, nearly three times the number of U.S. soldiers lost in Korea. For every U.S. soldier who fell wounded during that period, 25 civilians were injured in traffic accidents at home.

Since the first fatal automobile accident 51 years ago, nearly 975,000 persons have been killed in traffic.

MacArthur declines to return as witness.

Batteries Last Longer When They Are Rotated

Rotate your flashlight batteries to make them last longer in the prospect of a more limited supply, suggests one of the Nation's largest battery producers.

Increasing the life of your batteries will become more and more important as a conservation measure now that battery production is being reduced sharply because of growing defense production.

Rotation gets ultimate service out of dry cell flashlight batteries which are in daily use, explains W. S. Allen, general manager of the Electrical Division of Olin Industries, Inc., New Haven, Conn.

Users of two-cell flashlights, for example, should have a minimum of three sets of batteries and should change them every day for effective rotation, Mr. Allen said. This, he explained, gives batteries an opportunity to recuperate and increase their life. But he cautioned that it should not be expected that batteries will completely recover original strength.

Batteries can be numbered for convenience in rotating them and those not in use should be stored in a glass container in a refrigerator, Mr. Allen informed. They should also be permitted to "thaw" for at least an hour, he said, because they do not emit maximum power while still cold.

Sally Rand Fizzles Out In Favor of Home Talent

COVENTRY, England—Fan dancer Sally Rand and six other American girls anxious to reenact the famed Lady Godiva's ride scheduled by this English town lost out in favor of home talent.

Ann Wrigg, 28, a curvesome brunet actress received the nod.

She gets a long flaxen wig and skin-tight, flesh-colored bra and panties for the role of the fair-haired Saxon lady who was said to have ridden naked on a white horse through the famed city in an attempt to induce her husband, Lord of Coventry, to reduce taxes.

A committee spokesman said that Miss Rand cabled an offer to reenact the ride down to the barest detail, but that she was never under consideration.

"It would have been good publicity for her," he said, "but it would have attracted to our pageant people of the wrong kind — Peeping Toms of the worst sort."

The committee said that it made the fan dancer's name public because her press agent had already publicized her offer. The names of the six other American girls were withheld.

Birth Increases Over the World Are Continuing

NEW YORK, N.Y.—Birth rates throughout the world rose sharply after the close of World War II and have continued at high levels during the postwar years, insurance statisticians report. In many countries the postwar birth rates have been the highest since the baby boom that followed World War I.

Particularly striking gains were recorded in the United States, where the 1947 peak was one and a half times the average of 1937-1939. Almost as marked was the upswing in such widely separated countries as New Zealand, France, and Canada.

War Saw Rise

Most of the countries had higher birth rates during the war than in the years just before the war started. In the United States, for example, the rates averaged 15 percent higher in 1940-1944 than in 1937-1939, and in Austria, Sweden, Switzerland, and New Zealand the rise from the prewar to the war years was even more pronounced.

"These facts suggest that the postwar rise in births in many of the countries was due not so much to deferment of births during the war as to the improvement of economic conditions from those existing during the depression decade of the 1930's," the statisticians observe.

Declines Slight

Although the world trend has been somewhat downward since 1947, when countries reached their postwar birth rate peak, the declines generally have been slight. In the United States the 1949 rate was only 7 percent lower than that for 1947, and the decreases have been smaller in other countries, including Canada, the Union of South Africa, and Australia.

Exceptions to this are England and Wales, and the Netherlands, where the rates had declined markedly by 1949 from their postwar peaks.

French Upsurge

France, for many years prior to the war on the brink of a population decline, experienced an upsurge of births during the postwar years which by 1947 had carried its birth rate to a point 43 percent higher than the prewar level. By 1949 the French birth rate had dropped only slightly from its postwar peak.

Japan followed the general pattern set by most of the Western countries. Japan's 1947 birth rate was 22 percent above the prewar figure, and the decline from 1947 through 1949 was only 3 percent, although the first 9 months of 1950 showed a sharp fall which may bring the 1950 rate closer to the 1937-1939 level.

Western Germany and Italy have departed from the general pattern. Western Germany's birth rate rose somewhat during the postwar years, but remained below the 1939 figure, and the Italian rate, after rising during 1945 and 1946, declined by 1949 to 15 percent below that for the prewar period.

Future Doubtful

Difficulty is seen by the statisticians in predicting how long the high fertility rate of the postwar world will continue.

"It is surprising that it has lasted through 1949 and well into 1950 in many countries, especially in view of the relatively high birth rates which prevailed during the war," the statisticians comment. "But we probably will see fairly substantial reductions in the near future, although it is still too early to say when they will come, and how great they will be."

President Renews Life Of Series E War Bonds

WASHINGTON—Now you won't have to cash in your series E war bonds that you have been saving so long.

President Truman has signed a bill which lets you hold on to them and draw interest for 10 years after they reach maturity. The first ones matured May 1. They were then ten years old and were sold seven months before Pearl Harbor. Other series bought during and after World War II will mature at different dates through 1959.

As an inducement to get holders to hang on to E bonds, it is not necessary to report the interest for income taxes until the bonds are actually cashed.

The law specifically provides that any E bond more than 60 days old may be cashed at any time the owner desires. Accumulated interest will be paid to that point.

Besides the option of cashing or retaining matured bonds, the law also allows the owner to exchange his E bonds for G bonds. On these interest is paid by check each six months. This should appeal to retired persons or others who want to spend the interest as it accumulates.

In the United States there are 53 billion dollars invested in war bonds, of which 35 billion is in E bonds. Throughout the country 1.6 billion in E bonds mature this year.

Special Levy to Finance Auriol's American Visit

PARIS—The average Frenchman will contribute about one franc (one-fourth of a cent) to finance President Vincent Auriol's 16-day visit to the United States.

The President drafted a decree to this effect aboard the liner Ile de France before he started his trip to America. It has since been approved by the National Assembly and the upper house.

The Government granted 38,000,000 francs ($107,000) to cover expenses for the famous trip and also allocated another 4,330,000 francs for broadcasting and televising the trip.

Uncle Sam Says

Defense Bonds are now better than ever and one of the best ways you can do YOUR job is to buy Defense Bonds regularly.
